What it is

A company blog: an editor, image storage, publication and delivery of pages to readers — at a platform address or on your domain.

Free plan

The free plan costs nothing and has no time limit. It holds one blog in one language at an address on press.relcom.org, with the Relcom Press badge and without a custom domain (exact allowances are in the price list). A new blog at a platform address is hidden from search engines until it has three articles and is seven days old.

Your texts are your responsibility

The articles, images and links in the blog are yours, and you keep all rights to them. You give us only the permission the service needs: to store them, copy them into backups, translate them when you ask and publish them where you choose. You are responsible for the content and for having the right to publish it, including texts and images made with AI, and you check them before publication. We do not read or check articles before publication.

Press marks articles written with AI. Do not pass AI content off as written by a person where the law requires such a mark. In addition to the acceptable use policy, Press may not be used to generate masses of pages for search engines or to manipulate them.

Who publishes

An article is published by a person who has publishing permission in the blog. An AI assistant (ChatGPT, Claude or another chat) can be connected through the connector to one blog with the permissions you choose. The assistant prepares drafts; it publishes only if you have given it a separate publishing permission. What it writes is your content. You can end the connection in the console at any time. The assistant's provider receives the answers of the connector's tools under your contract with that provider; we are not responsible for the assistant or its provider.

AI features and services you connect

The autopilot, AI translation, rewriting and cover images work only with the API key of your own Anthropic or OpenAI account, which you enter in the console. Press sends those services what the task needs, on your instruction and under your contract with them. We do not control what they produce: check the result before publication. The same applies to your Telegram bot, to the photos you choose on Unsplash and Pexels (those services' licences apply to them) and to the sites you import from: you must have the right to copy them.

Team

A publication has roles: owner, administrator, editor, author, observer. A role applies in all blogs of the publication. Only the owner manages payment. You are responsible for whom you have given access to.

Images

The images readers see are resized for their screens and carry no camera data, including the location where the photo was taken. The uploaded original is kept privately for the blog and is not shown to readers. Images drawn by AI carry a mark that they were made by AI.

Custom domain

On paid plans a blog can open on a domain you control, for example blog.your-site, as your plan allows. You add the DNS records the console shows; we never change your DNS. The certificate is issued automatically. If a connected domain stops pointing to Press, we remind you after three days and remove it from the blog after seven.

Yearly payment

Press has yearly plans. A yearly plan is paid in advance for 12 months and renews for the following year.

If the yearly plan is cancelled in the first 14 days after the first payment, we refund the full amount. After that the plan runs until the end of the paid year and does not renew; money for the remaining months is not refunded.

30 days before renewal we send an email with the date and the amount of the charge. If a yearly plan has renewed automatically, a consumer may withdraw from it within 14 days after the renewal and receive a full refund.

If the paid plan is switched off

The publication moves to the free plan. Nothing is deleted or hidden: blogs, languages, members and the custom domain continue to work, even if there are more of them than the free plan allows. New ones cannot be added, and the "Relcom Press" badge appears on the blog pages again. Articles and images are kept.

Backups

We keep copies of the service's data to recover from faults. They are not a service for undoing your own mistakes: keep your own copies of what matters to you.

Your readers' data

If you turn on comments or otherwise collect your readers' data through Press, you are its controller and we process it for you under the data processing agreement.

When you leave

Articles in Markdown format can be obtained through the API or the connector for as long as the blog exists. There is no separate export button. A deleted blog stops opening immediately and is deleted permanently after 30 days; during that period the deletion can be undone.

Content complaints

If we are told that an article breaks the law or infringes someone's rights, we act under the acceptable use policy: we decide without undue delay, tell the sender what we decided, and tell you what was restricted, why and on what ground. You can object by replying to that email; a person, not a program, looks at the objection.
